Maya loved to paint. She would spend hours daily drawing and painting, and she became very good at it. One day, she entered an art competition and won it. She was proud of herself. She spent all her time practicing and drawing, neglecting her schoolwork and friends. Her grades began to slip, and she lost touch with her friends. One day, Maya realized that she had become so obsessed with drawing that she had lost sight of what was important. She was upset about it. One of her cousins suggested her skip art for some time and focus on her studies and relationships. After this, she decided to take a break from drawing and focus on what she neglected. She started studying harder and spending time with her friends again. Maya realized that while it's important to have hobbies and interests, it's equally important to maintain a balance in our lives.
